The 50 Year Tradition of Andersonville’s Midsommarfest

This year we celebrate the 50th anniversary of the first Andersonville Midsommarfest. The annual summer street festival features food, music, activities and vendors reflecting both Andersonville’s Swedish heritage and its contemporary diversity.

Andersonville’s festival is based on the traditional Swedish holiday of Midsommar, typically celebrated around the summer solstice, the longest day of the year. According to the Andersonville Chamber of Commerce, the tradition of a summer street festival in this neighborhood began in June of 1965, just after the official christening of the neighborhood as “Andersonville.” Prior to 1964, the neighborhood was only colloquially known as Andersonville and had no official designation.

They concentrated on rediscovering the neighborhood’s Swedish roots and promoting the area through its heritage. The Uptown Clark Street Business Association changed its name to the Andersonville Chamber of Commerce and held a dedication ceremony on Oct. 17, 1964, attended by Mayor Richard Daley and Illinois Governor Otto Kerner, among other special guests. They also began a host of other public events to promote the neighborhood including a...
Executive Director's Letter

Dear Members and Friends,

In early May we went to Ann Arbor to celebrate Kathryn's graduation from the University of Michigan. It was a wonderful weekend with beautiful weather and the feel of summer was in the air. Since then we have had some gray and rainy days in between the sunny days, which is typical before summer arrives here.

Summer in Chicago and Andersonville usually means hot and sunny days and a great time to be outdoors. One great outdoor event here in Andersonville is Midsommarfest that we celebrate the second weekend in June. We put a Midsommarstång (maypole) in the middle of Clark Street, and it is decorated with green leaves and flowers before we all sing and dance around it. Midsommar is traditionally celebrated in Sweden during the third weekend of June, around June 20, so we start the celebration a little early here in Andersonville.

When I was growing up we celebrated Midsommar with friends and relatives. The day started early when we went out in the woods to find the right tree for the maypole and then we walked through the meadows to gather wildflowers. After the maypole was decorated there would be time for special Midsummer food such as potatoes, matjessill (a special kind of herring) with sour cream and chives, and strawberries for dessert. After the food we danced, sang, and played around the Maypole before the evening ended with a large outdoor fire.

Singing and dancing is one way many of us enjoy music, for others it is the act of playing music or even just listening. The Museum’s Bollbycken group sings a lot of songs that have movements connected to some of these traditional songs. Many may recognize ”Små grodorna” (Small Frogs), “Björnen sover” (Sleeping Bear), “Vi äro musikanter” (We are Musicians), “Imse Vimse Spindel” (Itsy, Bitsy, Spider) to name a few. Some songs are the same for Midsommar as for other holidays.

Another way of enjoying music is to be part of a choir and sing with friends or play in a band or orchestra. When I worked as a preschool teacher we used music as a form of gathering, calming, and, of course, teaching. Growing up I sang in the school choir, church choir, and learned to play instruments. I started with the blockflöjt (recorder) as most of my friends did and then went on to piano, organ, and even the accordion. I now play the piano when no one is listening though I prefer listening to others play.

We are fortunate here at the Museum to have the opportunity to listen and enjoy music of many different varieties and origins. Already this year we have had concerts with Lena Bjärskog and Saft Stockholm, Ulda, Merula, Chicago Male Chorus, and we get to experience the sounds of Scandinavian Jam each month. Coming up in June is our annual concert celebrating Jenny Lind and a gospel concert with Immanuelskyrkan. Later in August we are going to enjoy a children’s choir from Uganda. Other musical events are in the planning stages and some of them will happen with short notice so if you are a music lover—check our online calendar often.

Back to Midsommarfest, for this street festival there is an opportunity to listen to music, sing, dance, eat some delicious food and much more. Familiar music by ABBA will be heard on Friday and Saturday evenings on the Swedish Stage at Foster, sponsored by Simon’s Tavern, in celebration of Andersonville’s 50th. On Saturday morning the Museum is happy to work with Chicago Male Chorus, Children’s Choir, Nordic Folk Dancers and Spelmanslaget to provide a wonderful mix of Swedish and Swedish-American entertainment. We hope you will join us for dancing around the maypole with Linda Westergren-Muhr in the lead. On Sunday morning come back to listen to Nordlandsband. The Museum has free admission all weekend and special craft activities for children as well as specials in the store starting on Friday, June 12.

I wish you all a wonderful summer, and hope to see you at the Museum soon. If you are traveling we hope you have safe travels and bring back some wonderful photos of your own version of Swedish summer that we can share on the Museum’s new Instagram account (swedishamericanmuseum).

Glad Sommar!

Karin

2 Flaggan Summer 2015
The Swedish American Museum’s special summer exhibit for 2015 is an exciting Chicago Cultural Alliance (CCA) project called “Chicago’s Families.” Spanning six sites across Chicagoland and involving 18 different cultural organizations, “Chicago’s Families” will present a mosaic of voices, memories and experiences of families in Chicago.

The Swedish American Museum will be one of six host sites and will present an exhibition called “Finding Home” in cooperation with the Japanese American Service Committee, the National Public Housing Museum and the University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC) Centers for Cultural Understanding and Social Change – Gender and Sexualities Center. “Finding Home” will reflect on how individuals and families negotiate the links between the people and places we come from and who we find ourselves living among. The exhibition will include stories of Japanese Americans finding their place in Chicago after the forced relocations during World War II, residents in the changing landscape of Chicago’s public housing, Swedish and non-Swedish residents of the resilient Andersonville neighborhood, and UIC students making and embracing their identities on campus.

Members of the Chicago Cultural Alliance have been working collaboratively to develop this project over the past three years. The exhibit was originally suggested at a CCA full membership meeting. After that meeting, CCA held a series of workshops to develop the idea with members and eventually created a committee of member institutions to help guide the project forward. Each of the six sites consists of a group of CCA member institutions who worked together with the exhibits coordinator to curate their stories and weave them together into an integrated narrative. This collaborative development model is in keeping with CCA’s mission of using ‘first voice perspective’ to increase public understanding of cultural diversity.

The Chicago Cultural Alliance is a consortium of 34 Chicago-area ethnic museums and cultural centers, and 19 partner institutions that include larger institutions, universities, libraries, public schools and governmental agencies. The CCA began through a series of partnerships between these institutions that were established through the Cultural Connections program at the Field Museum’s Center for Cultural Understanding and Change. In 2005, these core member and partner institutions began to officially form the CCA. In years since, CCA members have presented cross-cultural programs and tours, and have participated in institutional capacity-building workshops and seminars to increase public awareness of their institutions and the cultural diversity that permeates the city.

“Finding Home” will be on exhibit in the Swedish American Museum gallery space from June 7 through Sept. 13. The exhibit opened on Sunday, June 7, with a reception from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. ■

Nordstrom & Castle Recognized at the Annual Meeting

At the Annual Meeting on April 14, the Swedish American Museum honored long-time volunteer and board member Vereen Nordstrom as the 2014 Volunteer of the Year. The Museum’s Membership and Volunteer Manager, Elizabeth Cline, presented the award by first giving some clues about the honoree before revealing it was indeed Vereen.

Vereen appeared taken aback by receiving the honor, but anyone who spends time here at the Museum is aware of how much she helps out from her volunteering with the Brunk Children’s Museum of Immigration to her service on the collections committee and on the advisory board of the Nordic Family Genealogy Center and beyond. In 2014, Vereen also co-chaired the organization of the Tantalizing Treasures Sale that helped raise funds for the Museum.

Stacey Nyman, education manager for the Museum, said of Vereen, “She has volunteered countless hours helping with crafts, serving pancakes, researching activities, attending meetings, setting up, cleaning up, and most importantly—interacting with children and their parents. She is a beam of sunshine…always upbeat and ready to jump in where needed.”

Also honored at the Annual Meeting was Richard Castle, veteran pancake maker for some of our most popular children's events including Breakfast with Tomten and Pancakes with Pippi. Richard had been the designated pancake-flipper for two decades before his retirement from the position late last year. Everyone at the Museum was sad to see him hang up his spatula, but thankful for his many years of dedicated service.

Family Fun at Midsommarfest

Some of my most vivid memories of growing up here in Andersonville have to do with Midsommarfest. The excitement of waking up in the morning and knowing that we were walking to the festival was always overwhelming. I can almost feel the coins jingling in my pockets. The allowance I had been saving for weeks was ready to be spent on a souvenir or game. As an adult, the anticipation is just as great as I eagerly wait to watch the joy and wonder of my own children and proudly share my childhood memories as I watch them make their own.

To celebrate the 50th anniversary of Midsommarfest, we are planning a special day on Friday, June 12. Starting at 10 a.m. families visiting the Swedish American Museum will be delighted by crafts and activities. We will be creating dazzling candle lanterns, decorating colorful crowns, reading some Midsommar stories, playing Viking games and more!

Activities and crafts will run from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and will vary throughout the day. If you can’t join us on June 12, don’t worry. We will also have a children’s tent outside the Museum on Saturday and Sunday. Various crafts and activities will be going on there that will give everyone a creative break from the bustling Midsommarfest celebration. The Brunk Children’s Museum of Immigration will also be open for families to enjoy and explore.

Midsommarfest is a joyful and exciting time for our Museum and the community. It is a time for adults and children to join together and dance, sing and play. I hope that you stop by to visit and share with us some of your own memories from Midsommarfests past and make some new ones too!

Andersonville History: From Tragedy to Traditions

The Great Chicago Fire, a signal tragedy in city history, was the genesis of ethnic migration that led to the eventuality of Andersonville.

During four decades before the fire, Swedish immigrant settlers had established a community between the Chicago River and Division Street. What the immigrants called “Sweedetown,” centered at Chicago Avenue and Clark Street, was bustling and prosperous until its fiery doom on Sunday, Oct. 8, 1871.

Most of the Swedes who were dispossessed by the fire trekked northward to rebuild their homes and businesses. The area around Belmont and Sheffield, northwest of the terminus of the destruction, became the primary location for a rebirth of Sweedetown.

Soon thereafter, Foster Avenue (then 59th Street) and Clark Street (then Green Bay Road) became a second center for settlement, and for significant reasons. First, jobs were plentiful in nearby projects such as the Marine Hospital and Rosehill Cemetery. Second, commercial promise for shopkeepers rested on the fact that Green Bay Road, a former Indian trail, was a well-traveled link between Fort Dearborn in Chicago and Fort Howard in northern Wisconsin.

Most important, however, the location was outside the Chicago city limits and thus beyond reach of a post-fire ordinance requiring that all new homes had to be constructed of brick or stone. This would have been an onerous expense for many settlers whose assets had gone up in smoke.

There was a saying among Scandinavians that it was all well and good for a man to be a banker or a lawyer, but if he could build his own home, he would be worthy of esteem by his friends and neighbors. So build houses these talented carpenters did – with wood.

The Foster-Clark area that became Andersonville was part of the Township of Lakeview, which had been established in 1857. The meeting where the formation took place was held in Andersenville School. (It was named for a Norwegian minister, Paul Andersen, who had been pastor of an Evangelical Lutheran Church in old Sweedetown before the fire.)

According to one theory, Andersonville may have been named for a Swedish farmer, John Anderson, who settled here about 1840. His name is on an 1850 plat map of the area, and he was a highway commissioner for several years.

The Township of Lakeview, which included Andersonville and Edgewater, was annexed in 1889 to the City of Chicago, expanding the tax base in preparation for the coming World’s Columbian Exposition of 1892-93.

It was not until 1964 that the Andersonville neighborhood was named officially. A ceremony on Oct. 17 was attended by Illinois Governor Otto Kerner and Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley. The mayor even donned a blue and yellow apron to help begin a tradition of bell ringing and sweeping the sidewalks.

Almost 12 years later, dedication of the Swedish American Museum on April 19, 1976, solidified the importance of Andersonville to the history of people from Sweden who found new homes and opportunities in Chicago. This time, the guest officiant was King Carl XVI Gustaf.

beautification program, an annual art fair, a parade, and a Miss Andersonville U.S.A. contest.

The beautification program consisted of new plantings along Clark Street as well as the beginning of the “Bell Ringer” tradition. On a rotating basis, a business owner would step out of the shop at 10:30 a.m. and ring a large brass bell, signaling all the other shop owners to come out and sweep and clean the sidewalk. This program is why a hand bell is one of Andersonville’s symbols. This new Swedish and Scandinavian focus for the neighborhood was embraced by nearly all of Andersonville’s residents, including those who were not of Scandinavian origin. Dominick Lalumia, an Italian, who owned a restaurant called the Andersonville Inn, was one of Andersonville’s biggest supporters during this period of transition.

By 1969, Andersonville’s Midsommarfest was a popular annual event, being promoted as a “Viking wing-ding celebrating Midsummer,” in the Chicago Tribune. Midsommarfest posters from the 1970s and 1980s advertise children’s activities, the raising of a traditional Midsommar pole, entertainment and a raffle of Scandinavian Airlines tickets. Today, Andersonville’s Midsommarfest attracts around 50,000 revelers over its now three-day run. Be sure to join in the fun along Clark Street this June 12, 13 and 14!

This summer, stop by the Kerstin Andersson Museum Store and check out Scandinavian design company, Magisso’s, self-cooling line of elegant, modern, black terracotta dinnerware that just begs for a dinner party but is perfect for a picnic too. Imagine packing your picnic basket, heading to the beach and, after hours of swimming, serving a cool and refreshing feast on the sand—no ice needed.

Simply wet the terracotta for 20 seconds before you leave and your glasses, plates and serving dishes will continue getting colder for at least eight hours. Or, forget the water and just fill up a serving dish with your favorite dip and the liquid from the dip will continue the cooling process.

Like many Scandinavian designers, Magisso operates on a principle of problem solving that focuses on finding the simplest solution. How do you keep something cool for hours without refrigeration? You go back to basics, and you can’t get much more basic than the science of passive cooling or evaporation. The key is in the terracotta. For thousands of years ancient societies have used clays, like terracotta, to cool their homes and preserve foods when no other forms of refrigeration were available. Highly porous terracotta absorbs water which begins to evaporate lowering the temperature of the space around it and keeping homes cool, food safe and your smoothie ice cold and refreshing.

Magisso self-cooling items are glazed where food touches them, but unglazed on the outside so you can express yourself in chalk. Not only is the self-cooling system reinforced by science and supported by ancient test kitchens, it’s cool, modern and makes a great wedding, shower or any-occasion gift too.

Stop by the Museum Store this summer to see more beautiful Scandinavian items designed to make your life easier and more fun.

History, music, culture, food and local community all played a role in Darrell Phipps’ volunteer involvement at the Swedish American Museum. Darrell can be found from the depths of the collections storage area to festive evening events in the gallery. An internship at the Chicago History Museum piqued his interest in museums. He began volunteering here in 2014 and since then has contributed his time, knowledge and experience throughout the Museum.

Originally culinary school at Kendall College drew Darrell to Chicago from Florida in 2001. He followed culinary school with graduate school in American history and culture at the University of Illinois at Chicago where he focused on the relationship between music and culture. His academic background and his interest in music lead him to undertake a daunting project for our curator, Veronica Robinson.

Hundreds of records had been donated to the Museum over the years. Darrell dove in and began sifting through the collection. He separated the non-Swedish related albums included in large donations, identified duplicates, evaluated the importance of each album, and made a complete listing of the collection.

In the process Darrell discovered that in the 1940s and 1950s Swedish immigrant musicians began recording and pressing a few hundred copies of their records to sell at concerts and performances focused on the local market. The collection contains many examples of these small-run local recordings.

Darrell also points out the enormous influence of Swedish artists on music, especially evident in post-war pop music, and how this impact is vastly disproportionate to the size of the Swedish population. The generally upbeat vibe of Swedish pop music has permeated and influenced music worldwide. He notes some of the more recent influential musicians and groups are Robyn, the Cardigans, and Swedish House Mafia to name a few.

The collection is not the only area where Darrell has put his talents to use. Volunteering at a couple of special events made an impression with him early on. Not surprisingly a gospel music concert featuring high school students from Chicago and a Swedish gospel choir was a favorite. Sweden Votes: Special Election Panel also made an impact. He learned vastly more about modern Sweden than he had ever known including issues related to immigration and racism, along with successes enjoyed and challenges faced in today’s Swedish society.

Darrell encourages people to try volunteering. He finds that it is a wonderful opportunity to hear interesting stories, meet new people, explore and learn, and to really feel like you have made a contribution.
